GARDEN AND OUTDOOR LIVING

Small wonder

A string of outdoor rooms makes every inch count

Even small yards can live large if you plan them well. That's what Marla and Chuck O'Connell found out when they asked landscape designer Nick Williams to maximize their garden in Woodland Hills, California. "We didn't like to go outside," says Chuck of the loving lawn-and-croquet lawn yard that opened to the street, and the tangle of strawberry around the house. "We needed [the garden] to be livable."

Williams's solution: Add a series of patios around the 1,550-square-foot house and link them together, charm travertine-style, with paths. Provide privacy with low-lying bushes, and well-placed plants, evening drama with fountains and night lighting. And bring in fountains for the soothing sound of water.

Now the O'Connells have multiple places in which to relax, dine, or entertain in any slice of day. The new

A fount and pond set the mood in the garden. Behind the main wall, Chuck O'Connell and Marla O'Connell, including his first 4 1/2-foot fountain—have captured the new house.
